While the fire was at its height the girl ventured too near, and her clothing caught fire.

Several persons heard her cries and came to her assistance and tore the burning fragments from her body.

The child was carried into a store in the vicinity and an ambulance summoned. The surgeon applied the usual remedies, and removed the child to her home. She was horribly burned about the head. The girl lingered in agony through the night, and became unconscious early this morning, and died shortly afterwards. then.

She was considerably surprised, therefore, when at 4.30 in the afternoon the man's brother-in-law, named Valenstein, called and asked her it she had the keys to Mr. Hellman's flat, as he had tread to get into the apartments but alled. He showed her a postal cardialed the day before, written by Hellman to him, stating that he was feeling somewhat ill, and if he did not show up at the office yesterday to call at the flat and see what was the matter.

Airs Ostwald had no key, but sho managed to gain an entrance by climbing the fire-escape. Then she opened the half door for Valerstein and both went through the flat. The bed looked as if it had recently been occupied, but Hellman was not there. Then the bathroom was tried and the mask manufacturer was found there, dead.

He was sitting, dressed only in his night robes, with the head leaning over the bathtub. The features were not discreted in any way, but traces of paris green were found nearly.

The continued decrease in earnings gave warning of the danger of continuing the present fixed charges, while the prevailing business distress gave no hope for a recovery of the old basis of carnings for the present year. Coupled with this was the extraordinary financial stringency, which made the renewal of bans and the furnishing of additional collateral to secure its trust loan notes, a difficult if not impossible matter, and only depleted the treasury without avoiding the inevitable results.

Mr. Cromwell believes that the security holders of the Company have now the assurance that no further indebtedness can be created except with the permission of the Court, and with the present board of receivers that there is a good basis for recuperation, with honest and efficient management in the meantime.

CRUSHED TO DEATH BY A TROLLEY CAR.

parents live at No. 22 Halsey street, a short block away. The father is a d. Most, For: O'Donovan Rossa, Kette, driver in moderate circumstances. He

this had been killed."

The child started from home on a run for the candy store on Bleecker street, and attempted to crass Washington street as one of the old-fashioned cars came along. He was struck and knocked down midway between the tracks. The wheels, did not touch him, but he was rolled over and over by the box that incloses the motor and carried nearly a hundred feet before the car was stopped. Then children surrounded it, and twenty strong men on each end lifted the car so the body could be taken out. It was carried into Mullius's mornue.

The child was unconscious. The father arrived a minute after and Dr. Elliott ne child's scalp was torn away, there was a compound fracture of the skull and ribs, and both arms and legs were troken. The county physician granted a burial certificate and will order an inquest.
